

Intervention strategies within the school environment to meet parental psychological needs in supporting their child's schooling

To improve the quality of parents' involvement in their child's schooling, it is important to consider the satisfaction of their psychological needs.

When parents feel autonomous, competent and positively connected, they are more involved, structuring, and supportive of their child's autonomy.

Four intervention strategies for the school environment:

1

Encourage parents to maintain a positive relationship with their child during school support.

2

Raise teachers' awareness regarding the importance of supporting parents' autonomy and avoiding controlling approaches.

3

Encourage teachers to build strong and positive relationship with their students' parents.

Inform school staff about the importance of fostering a welcoming school environment, especially in promoting an open and inclusive atmosphere that encourages parental involvement.

Parents are key allies in helping students reach their full potential. It is important to implement strategies to support parental psychological needs in the context of their school support, while also promoting strong, collaborative relationships between parents and school staff.
